Hi [REDACTED],

Apologies I meant to say this afternoon and not this morning! I just spoke with Gillian to clarify and she said you are hotdesking nearby and she'll update you. Do give me a call if I can help any further.

Morning [REDACTED],

Thanks for your email. We were expecting you at 2pm today. Could I just double check whether your email also refers to this timeslot? Just want to make sure that we are all clear whether a meeting will or will not happen today.

We had been aiming to have a chat through the emerging recommendations from the assessment, and to get an up-date on what would be submitted to the May and July assessment committees. If we are not meeting today, would it be possible to give us an update through email?

Thanks,

[REDACTED]

Gillian, [REDACTED],

I want to confirm that we have declined the meeting that [REDACTED] had scheduled for this morning. I think both Roger and [REDACTED] are on leave today, so I wanted to make sure that you had received that update and are not waiting for us to arrive this morning.

[REDACTED] wasn't able to clarify the purpose of the meeting for me. I know Ed is speaking to Roger about our draft report, if there is anything else about the recorded crime statistics that you would like to discuss at this stage please do give me a call.
